"White House Chronicle," now celebrating its 20th year on PBS, mixes a sense of humor with serious discussion.

"We always had a solid mix of stations across the nation. Now we're picking up stations at a fast pace," King said.

The program airs on PBS stations, including WHUT, Channel 32 in Washington, its originating station, and sister station WETA, Channel 26, as well as major regional stations like WSBE, Channel 8 in Providence, RI and KEET, Channel 13, serving north coastal California. It also airs on public, educational and government stations, the commercial AMG TV network, and other broadcast outlets.

An audio version of the program airs four times weekends on SiriusXM Radio's POTUS (Politics of the United States), Channel 124.

"The program reaches viewers and listeners around the world on Voice of America Television and Radio. It's a kind of bonus and compliment," King said.

The current episode, which will air in Washington, DC this weekend, and on all the program's outlets throughout the week, features legendary journalist Hedrick Smith, author of "Who Stole the American Dream," John Gizzi, chief political columnist for Newsmax, Brian Keane, political analyst and president of SmartPower, and "White House Chronicle" co-host, Linda Gasparello.

"Llewellyn King brings not only his intellect but a great sense of humor to the business of journalism," stated Brian Keane. "He consistently focuses on major issues ignored by most from the South China Sea to the importance of water and energy highlighting the obvious and not so obvious. Moreover, his political savvy is uncanny," he added.

In addition to the program, King is a weekly columnist for InsideSources, a newspaper syndicate, and regular commentator on SiriusXm Radio's "The Morning Show with Tim Farley."
