Physicians diagnose and treat diseases or injuries. Physicians examine patients, take medical histories, interpret diagnostic tests and prescribe medications. Along with other health practitioners physicians offer treatment which varies depending on the type of therapy needed or opted for by patients.

The provision of personalized healthcare services is a growing practice amongst physicians and other healthcare practitioners. With improvement in knowledge individuals are now more conscious of the services they receive. This has led to increased demand for tailor-made services which offer flexibility to patients. Thus provision of personalized health services by physicians and other health professionals will satisfy more patients and increase the use of these services.

Physicians are practicing personalized healthcare approaches to retain as well as broaden their patient group.

According to The Business Research Company's Healthcare Consultant, Sravanthi Addapally, access to healthcare services is expected to improve in the developing countries. Effective implementation of health plans is the core reason for the improvement in healthcare access in many developing regions such as India, China and many Latin American countries.

The Business Research Company expects the physicians and other health practitioners market to grow to $2,111 billion in 2019. Americas was the largest geographic market in the physicians and other health practitioners market, accounting for $1,063 billion or 58.4% share of the global market.
