"I have been part of the Berlitz family for many years now in Toronto and I have seen first hand the difference we can make. Learning a new language is not just about memorizing verbs and grammar. It is about being able to fully grasp the language and the culture that surrounds it, something that is especially important for our clients in the business world," said Powell.

Berlitz firmly believes in a world without barriers to communications. Language is a living breathing thing and we continue to revolutionize global communication training by developing and adapting programs that help our clients meet their language goals and to be able to speak with confidence.

"We are not a language school," said Matthew Powell. "Berlitz is so much more. We are a language training centre that is 100 per cent geared to our clients needs. No matter the skill level, no matter the industry, we provide language training with the global marketplace in mind. No language school does this much."
