

UK Royal Air Force Added to the Military Space Situational Awareness Presentation Line-up

SMi Group adds a new presenter to Military Space Situational Awareness: Air Commodore Alan Gillespie of the UK Royal Air Force.

LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, February 1, 2017 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Taking place in London, United Kingdom, the event will give attendees the chance to discuss key topics that affect space situational awareness; from space-borne sensors to effective information management system with leaders from around the world.

With an agenda covering over 10 hours of content, attendees will hear innovative presentations led by senior industry and military figures, working with active projects aiming to enhance Space Domain Awareness for the international community.

Air Commodore Alan Gillespie, Battlespace Management Force Commander of the UK Royal Air Force, will be delivering a keynote address on:

- Recent Changes in British Military Space Doctrine Enabling Greater SSA Capacity
- Overview of the Strategic Defence Review 2015 and how this will affect UK SSA Capability
- How this in turn will affect the National Space Industry in light of more affordable space technologies
- Space Control is the key: how denial of service is mitigated through indigenous capacity as well as international collaboration

Along with Air Commodore Alan Gillespie, there will be leading military and research representatives presenting from 11 different nations, including host nation speaker Wing Commander Rayna Owens, AS Strat 4 from the UK MoD.

This year's agenda will explore key situational awareness challenges in an increasingly contested, congested and competitive space. Covering topical themes, such as: national updates on SSA, command and control, space weather, traffic management and optical/imaging sensors.
