

ADORA THINKS OUTSIDE OF THE GENDER TOY BOX

Introducing a new line of gender-neutral accessories that level the pretend playfield

LAGUNA HILLS, CA, USA, February 14, 2017 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Adora believes that it's never too early to practice good parenting. As an addition to their successful line of playful pink floral patterned accessories, the award-winning toy company is proud to release a gender-neutral collection that will allow both boys and girls to have fun nurturing.

This launch is an important one for Adora. In an age where girls can play with planes, trains and automobiles, why shouldn't boys play with dolls and change diapers? When it comes to playtime, offering a choice is vital in creating secure, happy and well-rounded littles. Removing gender bias and giving boys or girls options other than pink, purples and pastels gives them the green light to engage in nurturing play without gender bias. Whether they are preparing to be a big brother or sister, dream of being a stay at home mom or dad, or just enjoy playing with dolls, these toys will help foster kindness, teach practical skills, encourage self expression and bring out a child's gentle spirit.

"For Adora, there is no right or wrong way to play. Girls and boys should enjoy the freedom to choose the toys they want to play with without fear of judgment or scrutiny," explains Peggy Vicioso, VP of Marketing and Product Development. The 25+ veteran of the doll industry believes "Children should be encouraged to play with the toys that bring them joy. The more options we have out there today, the more successful we'll be at developing the strong, confident persons and parents of tomorrow."

The new accessories are designed in a contemporary aqua and gray zig zag pattern that appeals to both mommies and daddies alike. This must-have baby gear gives little ones the chance to practice hands-on care for their baby dolls while encouraging hours of nurturing, interactive and creative pretend play. Ideal for feedings, changings or daily strollings,
