announces a significant milestone in publishing the first 10 comparative State Economic Profiles including Arkansas, Colorado, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, New Mexico, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and Wisconsin.

These profiles provide information useful to companies determining the most suitable locations for manufacturing. Tax incentives, grants, loans and other important state economic metrics are included to aid reshoring companies in these difficult decisions.

“We very carefully designed the profiles to be compared side-by-side,” said Rosemary Coates, Executive Director of the Reshoring Institute. “We know of no other side-by-side comparisons like this to aid companies determined to bring manufacturing back to America. We are honored to host this important information for the States,” she said.

“We are delighted that the first ten states to respond to our survey are now published. Several more are in-process,” said Alex Levy, Director at the Reshoring Institute. “We know this is a major undertaking for the State Economic Development Organizations, and we really appreciate their efforts in assisting companies that are reshoring by providing this information.”

About the Reshoring Institute:
