Florida Politics: Roger Stone, former Trump advisor, said that The Smoking Gun website has come up with a bogus claim that he collaborated with a hacker

PALM BEACH GARDENS, FL, UNITED STATES, March 12, 2017

/EINPresswire.com/ -- Florida Politics: Roger Stone, former Trump advisor, said that The Smoking Gun website has come up with a bogus claim that he collaborated with a hacker, Guccifer 2.0 to hack data from the DNC and have WikiLeaks release it. Stone, says this is "another absurd media claim that is part of the long-standing absurd claim that Donald Trump had anything to do with the Russians. This is a charge without a shred of evidence."

Stone gives the timeline of facts.

First, all contact he had with the entity known as Guccifer 2 came after Stone had written an article that was published on August 5th 2016 by Breitbart News and vetted by their lead investigative reporter Lee Stranahan. That article came after the DNC and DCCC material had been released and identified the role of a hacker going by the moniker Guccifer 2 based on our own sources.

Stone, "Therefore, any such "collaboration" would've also involved a time machine – something that I think Putin has not perfected yet."

Stone continues, "At least some of the information published by Wikileaks came in a documents hand off to Craig Murray, a respected U.K. diplomat who has confirmed this. Most in the MSM have not reported this. I reported that a hacker calling himself Guccifer 2.0 had published the rest prior to Wikileaks publishing."

Lastly, "On August 14, some ten days, later I noted on my twitter feed that Guccifer 2.0 who had been suspended by Twitter had been reinstated. I did so because I abhor censorship. Then I did in fact have a short and innocuous Direct Message exchange with Guccifer 2.0. It was so perfunctory, brief and banal I had forgotten it. Not exactly 007 stuff even if Guccifer 2.0 was working for the Russkies, Stone finishes."
