Market Highlights:

The global hernia repair market has been evaluated as steadily growing market and it is expected that the market will continue to grow similarly in the near future. Hernia is a protrusion of an organ through a weak spot in the surrounding connective tissue called as a fascia. There are several types of hernia among which the most common are inguinal (inner groin), incisional (resulting from an incision), and femoral (outer groin). Apart from these, there are some other types such as umbilical (belly button), and hiatal (upper stomach) hernia. Hernia can be caused due to anything that causes an increase in pressure in the abdomen. There are some major factors in the advancements in the hernia repair such as transition into tension-free technique that incorporates the use of flat sheets of mesh instead of sutures, adoption of large pore meshes, and the adoption of laparoscopic surgeries instead of conventional open technique. Laparoscopic surgery being the minimally invasive surgery has several advantages over conventional open tension-free surgery. The use of laparoscopic surgery has proved to be favorable for both surgeons and patients as it offers benefits such as low recurrence rates, less post-operative pain and reduced recovery time.

Besides that, major companies in the business are involving in the product development for the treatment of different types of hernia. For example, Medtronic Inc. has launched AbsorbaTack 30X, an absorbable fixation device. Such fixation devices provide comfort as well as double strength fixation which ultimately reduces recurrence rate of the hernia. Increasing number of hernia patients, adoption of the minimally invasive surgery techniques such as laparoscopy for hernia repair and innovative product development by the leading market players are some of the factors that boost the growth of the hernia repair market.
