Diethylenetriamine, also abbreviated as DETA, it is an organic compound. The chemical properties of Diethylenetriamine is quiet similar to ethylene. It is colorless hygroscopic liquid which is soluble in polar organic solvents and water. Diethylenetriamine is a byproduct which is formed from manufacturing ethylene diamine from ethylene dichloride.

The drivers of the market are due to high demand of diethylenetriamine in various industries namely, petochemical industries, personal care industries, paper & pulp industries and others owing to this the market will grow at higher rate during the forecasted period. The manufactures are investing in diethylenetriamine. In-addition, development of bio based polyamides requires diethylenetriamine as a raw material owing to this the market will grow at a higher pace.

However, the growth of the diethylenetriamine market will be hindered due to stringent environmental regulations imposing restrictions on the use of hazardous substances. Additionally, diethylenetriamine does pose hazards in terms of its corrosive action on the skin as well as eyes. Also, diethylenetriamine could be combustibile at high temperature and could produce harmful and undesirable products such as carbon oxides and nitrogen oxides during combustion. Inhalation of diethylenetriamine spray mist could cause severe irritation in the respiratory tract, which is characterized by shortness of breath, coughing and choking. On the other hand, the raw materials used for the manufacture of diethylenetriamine products are expensive, and also relatively scarce in terms of availability.
