Description

HEPA filters provide a high level of efficiency of filtration for both the largest as well as the smallest particulate contaminants. A HEPA filter is expected to capture a minimum of 99.97% of the contaminants as small as 0.3 microns in size. This benchmark of the size is used in the efficiency ratings. This is so because it identifies the most difficult particle size for a filter to capture. The HEPA filter is one of the most efficient filters that remove particles even smaller than 0.3 microns. HEPA filters are tested through three levels.
