About Hypercalcemia Treatment

Hypercalcemia is a condition in which the calcium level in the blood is above normal. Too much calcium in the blood can weaken the bones, create stones in the kidneys, and interfere with the functioning of the heart and the brain. Hypercalcemia refers to the condition where too much calcium enters the extracellular fluid or when there is insufficient calcium excretion from the kidneys. The cases of hypercalcemia are mainly caused by malignancy or hyperparathyroidism. Hypercalcemia is an outcome of overactive parathyroid glands. These four tiny glands are located near thyroid gland and each of them are about the size of a rice grain.

The analysts forecast the global hypercalcemia treatment market to grow at a CAGR of 5.44% during the period 2017-2021.
