

Argentina, South Africa, France, UK RAF and more look to upgrade their Military Flight Training program

SMI Reports: Military Flight Training returns to London on 11th -12th October 2017 to maximise flight training capabilities for the 21st century's aircraft.

LONDON, LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, May 17, 2017 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Military flight training experts and world leading solution providers will meet at SMI Group's 8th annual Military Flight Training taking place in London on 11th-12th October 2017.

Military Flight Training continues to be an essential aspect for Defence Forces and military air craft manufacturers worldwide. With military budgets being restricted globally, there is a need for new training doctrine and new simulation technology to assist with the training of new and current pilots. The 2017 conference will bring together expert training programme managers and industry solution providers, all attending to hear the very latest strategies relating to synthetic and live training and how the ongoing technology revolution is challenging conventional delivery of pilot training.

This conference represents a unique opportunity for all military flight training decision makers and technologists to meet and exchange ideas, content and new best practices on how to create the next generation of military grade pilots.
