Market Overview:

An electronic flight bag (EFB) is an electronic information management device that helps flight crews perform flight management tasks more easily and efficiently. An EFB electronically stores and retrieves documents required for flight operations such as operating manuals, aeronautical charts, airport information, route information and weather. The major drivers for the growth of electronic flight bag market are safety and replacement of all paper-based manuals. The electronic flight bag is used for safety of pilots by providing up-to-date weather and assist by providing the route so as to avoid discretionary fuel burn.

North America is leading the market for electronic flight bag market during the forecast period due to growing commercial aircraft and reduction in the maintenance of aircraft. Europe is the second largest region for this market valued at USD 551.8 million in 2011 and is projected to grow at a CAGR of 12.44%. Asia-Pacific is the fastest growing market during the forecast period.
