About Long-Term Care

Long-term care refers to a continuum of care. More than just nursing homes, facility-based long-term care also includes services such as continuing care retirement communities, assisted living, and board-and-care homes. These include adult day service programs, meal programs, senior centers, home healthcare aides, and transportation services. The assisted living facilities consist of apartments, where the residents reside and are cared.

The analysts forecast the global long-term care market to grow at a CAGR of 6.18% during the period 2017-2021.
