

US Military Will Return to London to discuss future ISR capability, operations and training

Four US Military Experts will present in London at Airborne ISR 2017

LONDON, LONDON, UNITED KINGDOM, June 19, 2017 /EINPresswire.com/ -- "The US Air Force (USAF) is keeping the U-2 Dragon Lady manned high-altitude intelligence, surveillance, and reconnaissance (ISR) aircraft after years of attempting to retire it, according to a key officer.

Major General Jim Martin, USAF deputy assistant secretary for budget, told reporters 23 May at the Pentagon the service plans to keep the U-2 well into the future."

For those wanting to learn more, SMi Group is pleased to announce, the US Air Force will be back this October in full force, discussing their future capability developments, operations and training at Airborne ISR 2017. Speakers include:

- Brigadier General Peter Lambert, Director of Intelligence, Headquarters Air Combat Command, United States Air Force
Presenting: Coordinating Aerial Intelligence Doctrine and Architecture in Support of Shifting Operational Requirements
