Description

Prison management systems deliver the information to the law enforcement personnel and also reduces the workload of managing the ever-growing volumes and diversity of inmate population. Prison management systems can also be used by all the prisons across a country to share a common database of the criminals. In addition, it captures biometric information of all prisoners so identification can easily be performed at all facilities. Prisons must maintain high levels of security to prevent escapes, attacks on inmates and staff, riots, suicides, and other forms of violence. In order to maintain safety and security, prisons administrators have to know the whereabouts of all inmates, visitors, external contractors, and prison staff at any given time.
