

Denise McCormick of Arbonne International to be Featured on CUTV News Radio

MT. PLEASANT, IOWA, UNITED STATES, June 28, 2017 /EINPresswire.com/ -- By 2020, 50 percent of households will be doing something in direct sales. Network marketing can offer women a second income that's residual, but most important, empowering.

Denise McCormick learned this first-hand when she tapped into her entrepreneurial spirit.

After a career spent in education as a college professor, today Denise has redirected into network marketing and she has no intention of looking back.

"People realize their individual power. It's up to you if it's going to be the way you want it to be," says Denise. "We all have our challenges but with a positive attitude you can overcome your obstacles."

Denise says one the biggest problems facing women today is quality childcare. Network marketing is something women can do from their home at the time they choose to do it.

"There are so many women working at the poverty level with so many obstacles in their way," says Denise. "My whole purpose and passion is to help women become economically sustainable. With my education and mentoring background, it was natural for me to pursue network marketing. It envelopes all of the things I'm passionate about as a person: education and helping women."

“

My whole purpose and passion is to help women become economically sustainable.”
