Market Research Future

The spinal cord compression-spinal stenosis market is chiefly driven by rise in cases of arthritis, congenital spinal defects, instability of the spine, slip discs due to reasons such as spondylitis, trauma, tumours etc. The increasing penetration of spinal and orthopaedic hospitals and the rising rates of screening is driving the market growth.

According to the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality of the U.S. Department of Health & Human Services, 23% of low back pain affect patients over 65 years of age. Minimally invasive spine surgery is another development which reduces the stay of hospitals and pain associated with the surgical procedure due to lesser trauma. Minimally invasive spine surgery is performed by making small incisions with the assistance of a microscope, endoscope, tiny camera and miniature surgical instruments. As the success of minimally invasive spine surgery is highly dependent on the skill of the surgeons, scarcity of skilled surgeons is acting as a constraint on the global spinal cord compression-spinal stenosis market.

Product development is another strategy to use as can be seen in the case of implants and graft procedure. Titanium metal implants are the latest which the implant industry has to offer which are strong, yet flexible enough to allow for easy movement.

Considering all these factors the market for spinal cord compression-spinal stenosis is expected to reach $ 8.5 billion by the end of 2023, this market is projected to growing at a CAGR of ~ 11.5 % during 2017-2023.
