Executive Summary

Fibroadenomas are benign tumours of the breast which are characterized by a mixture of stromal and epithelial tissue. Fibroadenomas develop from the milk producing glands to form a solid lump. Fibroadenomas are caused due to hormone imbalances and the symptoms are painless, firm, mobile lump in the breast of a woman. According to American Cancer Society, fibroadenomas are most common in young women in their 20s and 30s, although they can be found in women of any age. The growth of these tumours is faster during pregnancy while menopause, causes them to shrink.

The market for fibroadenomas treatment is growing due to factors such as growing use of hormonal contraceptives which increases the chances of fibroadenomas, genetic predisposition, greater screening rates, growing awareness etc. Obesity also increases the chances of developing fibroadenoma Breast. The market restraints are the non-life threatening nature of the fibroadenomas, the self-resolving nature of Fibroadenomas etc.

However, against the backdrop of the worsening regulatory and reimbursement environment combined with the uncertainty of healthcare reforms will restrain and threaten the future market for high intensity focused ultrasound (HIFU). The U.S. food and drug administration (FDA) classifies medical devices into Class I, II, and III with regulatory control increasing from Class I to Class III, based on the need to provide reasonable assurance of its safety and effectiveness. In general, most Class I devices are exempted from premarket notification 510(k) while the situation gets more and more serious for Class II devices and most Class III devices which require premarket approval. Positive Mental Attitude (PMA) is very time and effort intensive process due to requirements of valid scientific evidence about the probable health benefits from the intended use of a device which must outweigh the probable risks. It also requires a reasonable evidence to assure that the device will significantly help a large portion of the target population. Thus regulatory uncertainty in the FDA approval process for HIFU will constrain the market.
