“body armor and personal protection Industry Estimated to grow at a CAGR of 4.11%, to value US$3.1 Billion by 2027”
The market is expected to value US$2.1 Billion in 2017

During the forecast period, the soft armor segment is expected to account for the largest share of spending, accounting for 36% of the overall global market. Spending in the soft armor segment will be largely driven by procurement programs in the European region, followed by investments in Asia-Pacific, North America, and the Middle East. Innovations in developing integrated under suit systems, soft ballistic protection plates, and exoskeletons will drive demand for soft armor and provide better flexibility and speed suited for a wide range of missions.

Military body armor and personal protection market is expected to be led by North America with a share of 34.9% over the forecast period, followed by Asia-Pacific with 21.3% and Europe with 18.9%. The Middle Eastern market for military body armor and personal protection is expected to account for 14.5%, followed by the Latin American and African markets with shares of 5.6% and 4.8%.

The advent of various soldier modernization programs is one of the major factors that drive the body armor and personal protection market. Countries including the UK, France, Germany, and Italy, who participated in operations in Iraq and Afghanistan, along with the US, have identified capability gaps in their soldier systems which created difficulty in troop movement due to their heavy weight systems in difficult terrains.
