Military Flight Training 2017 will represent a unique opportunity for all military flight training decision makers and technologists to meet and exchange ideas, content and new best practices on how to create the next generation of military grade pilots. Speakers for the event include UK MoD, the British Army, Swedish Armed Forces the Czech Air Force and more.

Next week's sessions will cover exclusive and collaborative panel discussions on "Balancing Synthetic and Live Training for Optimised Fast Jet Pilot Development" and on "Current and Future Challenges of Flight Training." Panellists will represent five different nations.

Alongside the two-day conference, SMi Group will be hosting a pre-conference workshop entitled "Military Helicopter Training – a UK perspective". The workshop will aim to explore the challenges facing military flight training organisations as they align more closely with Civil Aviation regulations, and look to the future of training in an era of dwindling budgets and increased deployments. Major (Retd.) Peter Dean, who retired from the British Army in 2014, will be leading the workshop.
