Antivirus is a software that scans the system memory, OS, and systems files using signature-based detection methods, heuristic detection methods, rootkit detection, and real-time scanning to prevent computers from being infected with malware. The Internet usage has become significantly essential in our day-to-day life. With increased usage, it brings along the risk of infecting devices with various kinds of malware, leaving the system unprotected and damaged. These malware have different sources that may or may not be known to users; some of these could be through social media websites, email spams, and websites that have malicious codes.

A malware is a program that loads on a computer through the Internet or infected disks. Computer viruses are man-made and have a tendency to replicate themselves. Therefore, to fight such viruses, antivirus software is used. It detects, prevents, and removes viruses caused by malicious programs. Though antivirus software cannot prevent every type of malware attack, it can prevent their intrusion into a computer system. Avast, AVG, ESET, Kaspersky, Microsoft, and Symantec are the major vendors in this market.
