"Truck dealers often view IT as a cost of doing business, rather than as an investment that can help them become more competitive," said Erik Nachbahr, President of Helion Trucking Technologies. "In this industry time is money and an outdated IT infrastructure can result in downtime, lost revenue, reduced customer retention and loss of employee buy-in."

The annual Karmak conference brings heavy-duty truck dealership personnel together from across North America. Attendees learn and discuss strategies to work more efficiently in business, while networking with others in the heavy-duty industry.

Helion offers 24-hour monitoring, managing and problem resolution for truck dealerships' computers, servers, networks and phone systems. Additionally, Helion collaborates with carrier partners to ensure adequate and resilient Internet and phone connectivity that support business goals. Helion also takes care of security, patch management, data backup, recovery and more.

Nachbahr's session is scheduled during the lunch break at the Karmak conference, on Wednesday, October 18th at the Hilton St. Louis at the Ballpark in St. Louis, Missouri.
