About Saffron

Saffron is obtained from the filaments of the flower Crocus sativus. The dried stigma of this flower finds various uses in the culinary, medicine, cosmetic, and other industries. The thread consists of active ingredients that impart properties such as color, taste, and aroma. The three main constituents of the dried stigma are crocin, picrocrocin, and the safranal. The intense yellow hue of saffron is due to the presence of crocin; and because of the color, saffron finds extensive usage in the Middle Eastern and Mediterranean cuisines and in dyeing woolen clothes and rugs.

Technavio's analysts forecast the global saffron market to grow at a CAGR of 5.99% during the period 2017-2021.
