

Keeping Pet-loving Millennial Employees Happy Just Got A Whole Lot Easier With Pets Onsite Startup

Pets Onsite provides an innovative solution to help companies allow their pet-loving employees a way to bring their pets to work without disrupting the office.

DALLAS, TEXAS, UNITED STATES, October 24, 2017 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Bringing pets to work is one of the hottest new company perks that's sweeping across the nation. More and more companies are offering this benefit. Why? Because the work-force demographics reveal that there are more pet-owning employees than ever before.

Mala Brough launched a startup called Pets Onsite. Her startup provides an innovative solution to allow employees to bring their pets to work without disrupting the office. Instead of pets coming into the office, this startup allows employees' pets to play and stay inside customizable mobile pet daycare units parked on their company's premises.

"Pets Onsite allows companies to offer employees the valuable perk of bringing their pets to work. Our onsite mobile pet daycare units alleviates potential problems with pets coming into the office," states Mala, Pets Onsite founder. There's no cost to the employer to offer Pets Onsite. The expense is picked up by the employees that use the service.

Mala's startup plans to capitalize on three major industry trends: One. Millennial employees are waiting longer to get married, opting for pet ownership instead. Two. They're the largest generation of active workers in the US and finally

Three. Millennials own more pets than any other generation in history. "Companies that ignore these facts will find it harder to retain and recruit Millennials." states an industry HR expert.

Executives at a Fortune 25 company were surprised when a Pets Onsite surveyed revealed that ninety-six percent of their corporate headquarter employees said Pets Onsite would be beneficial. They also learned Pets Onsite would save their employees seven thousands of hours a month.

Reducing stress was the number one reason why employees wanted Pets Onsite.

"Employers are starting to realize that having a Millennial bring a pet to work wind up getting a more focused employee, someone more comfortable at the office and a person willing to work longer hours," said Bob Vetere, president, and CEO of the American Pet Products Association. Employers also see a reduction in absenteeism and stress-related medical costs.

Pets Onsite founder is not new to the pet industry. Mala co-founded, Petclix, the most successful mobile pet photography company in the USA. Now in its eleventh year, Petclix has successfully photographed thousands of pets across thirty-five states and worked with hundreds of businesses.

"Most people consider their pets as their children. Pets Onsite provides a solution to allow employees to bring their furry children to work without the hassle, risk, and overhead to companies," states Mala.
