China SDHI fungicide Market Research Report

In the past few years, SDHI fungicides have been developing fast. Eerily in 1969, the first SDHI fungicide named carboxin has entered the market, earlier than triazole fungicides and strobilurin fungicides. In 2003, boscalid has entered the market, which was the significant milestone of SDHI fungicides development. In 2005, its global market value was up to USD100 million, and in 2012 it reached USD300 million, this has attracted many pesticide manufacturers to pay attention to the research of SDHI fungicides.

In recent years, many MNCs have involved into the research and development of SDHI fungicides. In 2010-2012, Bayer has launched three SDHI fungicides: bixafen, fluopyram and penflufen; Syngenta has launched two SDHI fungicides: isopyrazam and sedaxane; BASF has launched its third SDHI fungicide fluxapyroxad; Mitsui Chemicals has launched its first SDHI fungicide penthiopyrad. By the end of 2016, there are about 23 SDHI fungicides have entered the market or under development.

In 2014, its global market value of SDHI fungicides has reached USD1.37 billion, with a CAGR of 27.2% during 2009-2014, accounting for 8.4% of global fungicides total. The top five SDHI fungicides by market value were boscalid, fluxapyroxad, bixafen, penflufen and sedaxane, with total market value of USD1.09 billion, accounting for 79.4% of SDHI fungicides total.

As the biggest pesticide supplier globally, China has been playing an important role in the global SDHI fungicides market. China is the largest generic pesticides producer in the world, and it can produce 4 kinds of SDHI fungicides at present, named boscalid, thifluzamide, carboxin and flutolanil. In addition, some SDHI fungicides will be off patent in the next decade, such as fluxapyroxad, bixafen, penflufen, sedaxane, benzovindiflupyr, etc. China's SDHI fungicides industry will have fast development in the next decade. Though triazole fungicides and strobilurin fungicides are the mainstream ones in China fungicide market, SDHI fungicides will lead the new trend in fungicide market. Compared with other fungicides, SDHI fungicides cost more, but they are more effective and have no resistance problem. More and more farmers begin to recognize and accept this new kind of fungicides.
