It was a small but professional event with a variety of people travelling to the capital to view the films on show. The film genres included documentary, action and even comedy to name a few. The festival showcased feature length films over the first day and a variety of shorts which kept the audience entertained over the following 4 days. Looking around the cinema it was clear that all who attended had a enjoyable experience and this was also visible in the Q&A session during every night of screening which created lively conversations. Even the cinema lobby was an exciting place to be with filmmakers discussing their next projects amongst each other long after the event has finished.
