

Angie Sherman of L.O.V.E. Them Oils to be Featured on CUTV News Radio

SUBLIMITY, OREGON, UNITED STATES, November 10, 2017 /EINPresswire.com/ -- There are three parts to wellness: physical, emotional and spiritual. And you need to have those three parts in balance to enjoy whole body wellness. When you are in balance by working on your physical health, your emotional health and your spiritual health, it's going to open you up to your true purpose in life and you will function as your highest self.

Years ago, Angie Sherman, now a retired nurse, began to experience severe chronic stress-related health problems. By 39 she was diagnosed with diabetes.

"I was in very poor health," recalls Angie. "It was the philosophy of taking care of everybody but myself, of stress-eating, stress-drinking. Stress had been a huge part of my life even as a child. I found myself unable to work as a nurse anymore."

And so Angie left her nursing career to take care of herself. That is when she was first introduced to alternative medicine and the wonders of doTERRA's certified pure therapeutic grade essential oils.

"I was very skeptical at first. If these essential oils were so amazing, why had I not heard of them before? Why were we not utilizing them in our mainstream healthcare?" Angie wondered.

"With a trusted friend encouraging, I started my essential oil journey back to whole body wellness. I dug in and started working on the three biggest issues impacting my life daily: my diabetes, my severe digestive upset and my deep, deep depression," recalls Angie.

Angie first started using doTERRA essential oils along with boosted nutrition, exercise, and adequate hydration to help raise her body's vibrational energy to a frequency that promotes healing. Within a month her digestive system started showing improvements and her insulin needs decreased. Within three months her emotional state started to change.

"From that day forward I started to smile again and I haven't looked back. I'm extremely passionate about sharing what I do, because I really feel it has saved my marriage and most importantly my life."

Today, Angie is the founder of L.O.V.E. Them Oils, a distributor of dōTERRA essential oils. She travels all over the country teaching classes on essential oil use and other health & wellness topics such as stress management, hormonal balancing, and digestive health. She is passionate about building a network of healers and is actively searching for other healthcare practitioners who would like to learn more how doTERRA essential oils could enhance their current practice.

“So many people don't want to take accountability for their own health,” says Angie. “Understanding what kind of support you need is essential for everybody. That is where I come in, I provide guidance to help people get started on their journey of whole-body wellness. I offer free essential oil consults to my customers. I direct them to resources where they can learn more through literature, live and online classes and social media groups.”

Unlike other oils adulterated with alcohols and even formaldehyde, dōTERRA essential oils offer a higher quality of essential oils for health and wellness than has previously been available. dōTERRA's commitment to ensure every bottle is 100% molecularly sound with no inconsistencies has inspired even Western medicine practitioners to begin adding dōTERRA's essential oils to their recommended treatments.

“It is an art to produce this high-quality, molecularly sound essential oil,” says Angie. “doTERRA considers their farmers “artisans.” doTERRA sources their essential oils from native plant origins currently involving 45 countries worldwide.

CUTV News Radio will feature Angie Sherman in an interview with Jim Masters on November 14th at 4pm EST.
