About Automotive High-performance Air Filter

The major function of an engine air filter is to filter the air required for combustion. High-performance air filters (HPAFs) are designed to increase airflow and protect the engine from wear and tear. The market for HPAF is mainly driven by individual companies under the technology validation associations, which play a crucial role in the aftermarket development. The HPAF protects the engine from over or under exposure to air inputs, thereby creating optimum air-fuel mixture ratio for better efficiency.

Technavio's analysts forecast the global automotive high-performance air filter market to grow at a CAGR of 6.63% during the period 2017-2021.
