Power Rental Market 2017

Rental power is used to meet peak load demand, base load supply or as a standby. The need to provide uninterrupted power is a major factor driving the growth of the power rental market; as using power rentals is more economical than maintaining a reserve plant, the demand for rental power has risen over time. The demand for rental power is expected to increase on account of growing public infrastructure construction, the increasing industrial base, and supply of power to remote areas. The oil and gas sector is a major end-user of rental generators and deploys them across the entire value chain; this is because most of the oil refineries and sites are located in remote areas where grid power is inaccessible.

The analysts forecast the global power rental market to grow at a CAGR of 4.92% during the period 2016-2020.
