Natural Rubber Market 2017

Rubber is an elastomer type polymer with the ability to retain its original shape post-deformation. In the resting state, rubber is in a coiled form. The ability to stretch its monomer chains offers the elastic feature to rubber. It returns to its original shape when the chains snap back after the tension is released. Rubber is a term for macromolecular substances that can be of natural and synthetic origin. The natural origin compound is generally known as natural rubber (NR). It is an addition polymer that is derived from the milky white fluid (also known as latex) of tropical rubber trees. Natural rubber is vulcanized by linking shorter chains with sulfur to form longer chains. Synthetic rubber is an artificial elastomer that resembles natural rubber closely in various features.

The analysts forecast the global natural rubber market to grow at a CAGR of 4.06% during the period 2017-2021.
