A Caring Touch

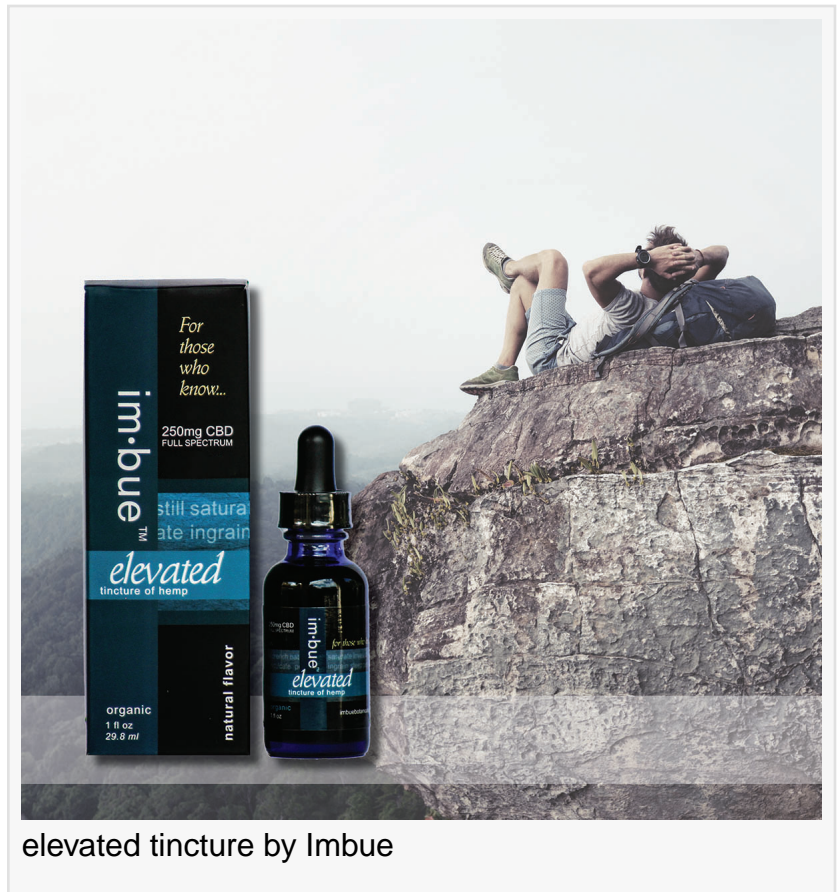

The Founders

of Imbue Botanicals. "We are confident that the addition of this product to the residents' diets will aid on a variety of levels, and provide exceptional benefits to these deserving animals."

We've noticed a real difference in the monkeys we've been giving the tincture to," said Shelley Ladd, Special Needs Manager at Jungle Friends. "We have over 300 residents at our sanctuary, and many of these monkeys have severe behavioral and anxiety issues resulting from the deplorable treatment they've suffered, and this product really helps!"

Jungle Friends works cooperatively with a national network of other credible animal sanctuaries, government agencies, other primate and animal protection organizations, and qualified individuals to find placement for unwanted monkeys and to combat the exploitation and mistreatment of captive primates.

And while their immediate and urgent responsibility is to provide the best possible life for the monkeys they are able to house at their sanctuary, their mission also extends to engage the interest and support of the national and international communities. Every monkey successfully released from laboratory research, or rescued from a life of abuse or neglect as a "pet", an "entertainer" or a "breeder", becomes a part of the message that these beings are worthy of our efforts and must be included in our moral universe.

Jungle Friends relies on support from individuals and other organizations to carry out its mission. "It's a mission we are very proud to support", said Tom Bauer.
