

The Three Rules of Learning Management Systems: Reporting, Reporting, Reporting

Indy SaaS company UpAbility reveals newest product features

INDIANAPOLIS, IN, USA, February 6, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Indianapolis-based learning management system (LMS) provider UpAbility is now able to make professional development and attaining accreditation even easier for association members.

Through the UpAbility LMS, association staff can now create custom reports and progressive reports and set up recurring automated emails to send updates to association executives. With this enhanced reporting process, associations can more easily see how members are using the system and react accordingly to make the learning process better.

“We know how important it is for associations to track learner progress with the eLearning platform,” UpAbility CEO Patrick Martin said. “If you don’t know what content learners access and how often, you aren’t able to evaluate your courses or learning strategy. Easier tracking makes it easier for association staff to see the whole picture and better serve members.”

In today’s information economy, an LMS gives associations the ability to become the online platform of choice for members looking to improve their skills.”

Aside from deeper reporting, the UpAbility LMS has also added flexibility in report formats to more easily integrate with association management software.

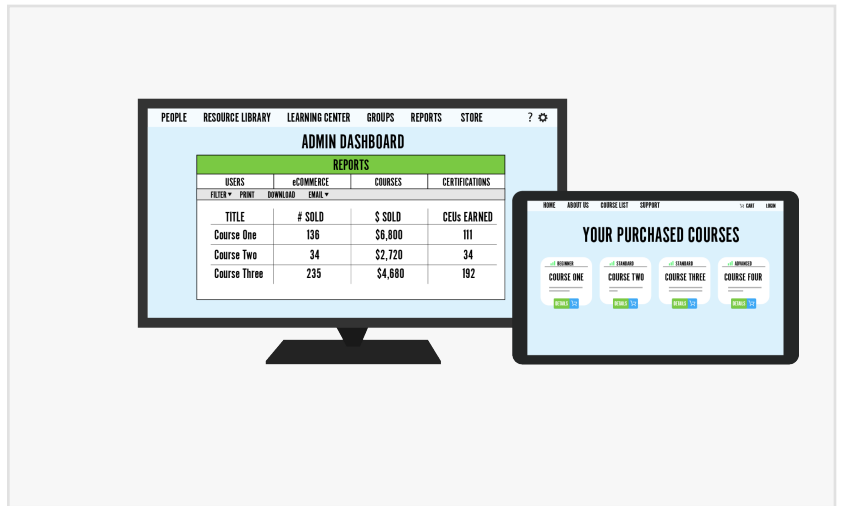

“In today’s information economy, an LMS gives associations the ability to become the online platform of choice for members looking to improve their skills,” UpAbility CEO Patrick Martin said. “Integrating with other platforms associations are using is a way to help associations be efficient across platforms.”
