THE PEOPLE'S VOICE

Medical treatment facilities and insurance companies will do everything that they can to try and save money, including cutting your workers' compensation short."

Ken Saffren, Partner

At Saffren & Weinberg, Ken Saffren, Attorney, specializes in workers' compensation cases along with personal injury litigation and social security. His firm also deals with cases involving property damage, wrongful death, product liability, and medical malpractice.

Recently, Attorney Saffren was able to help a client receive a favorable settlement on a workers' compensation case. The client had been out of work and on workers' compensation for the better part of twenty years. The defendant's hospital recently filed a termination petition/suspension petition against the client which had to be fought in court.

The workers' compensation judge came back with the result ordering that the hospital should continue to pay the claimant's workers' compensation benefits plus continued to pay for her medical treatment.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, over 3 million accidents occur on the job every year. Medical treatment facilities and insurance companies will do everything that they can to try and save money, including cutting your workers' compensation short.

The workers' compensation judge came back with the result ordering that the hospital should continue to pay the claimant's workers' compensation benefits plus continued to pay for her medical treatment.
