Traffic to Increase in San Jose as the City Welcomes 20,000 Google Employees Over the Next 10 to 12 Years

San Jose, CA: Google, one of the largest and most profitable companies in the world, is in the process of acquiring 40 acres of real estate in the San Jose Valley. This will likely change the economic dynamics of the area, bringing around 20,000 jobs to the valley over the next 10 to 12 years. This will also affect transportation in the city, as the area could see as many 20,000 new drivers on the road in the coming decade, leading to more congestion around peak commute times. Businesses like Stevens Creek Toyota are likely to see an uptick in car sales as more individuals and technology professionals relocate to San Jose in the coming years.

More people working in Palo Alto, Silicon Valley and Mountain View are relocating to San Jose as a way of lowering their living expenses. Google is capitalizing on this trend by relocating some of its employees to San Jose. This will bring more employment opportunities to the city and will help boost the local economy, leading more residents to consider buying a new or used car to help them with their transportation needs. This move will likely dramatically alter driving conditions in certain neighborhoods over the coming years, as there's likely to be more traffic and accidents on the road. An increase in well-paying jobs in the area may increase new car sales and luxury car sales, as the median income in San Jose is likely to increase. With more drivers on the road, the local car industry may also see an increase in demand for safety features such as rear park assist, lane change assist, and OnStar emergency services.
