WASHINGTON, DC, UNITED STATES, April 3, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- New Podcast Features In-Depth Conversations about economics and its impact on Black people, covering the Federal Reserve System, banks, interest rates, bitcoin, Black unemployment, the stock market, tariffs and trade, and the US Congress.

Podcast Available Today on Soundcloud

William Michael Cunningham, one of the world's best economists, today launched "Economics for Black People," featuring in-depth conversations on economic topics of interest from a Black perspective. These topics include the Federal Reserve System, interest rates, bitcoin, blockchain, Black unemployment, the stock market, tariffs and trade, Congress, and more. The prescient economist was one of the few to see the financial collapse coming. The Podcast goes behind the numbers with explanations and implications for the Black community, exploring what matters most, economic analysis methods and what the numbers really mean.

The "Economics for Black People" Podcast is available for listeners today at <https://soundcloud.com/william-michael-cunningham> . Mr. Cunningham will be posting three interviews each month.

"Economics for Black People" is already a destination for listeners to discuss economic topics of the day on WURD Radio's "Reality Check with Charles Ellison" broadcast each and every Thursday at 6 pm EST. Economics for Black People is a natural extension of those conversations, bringing the biggest topics in economics to the forefront in a way that only William Michael Cunningham can.

The first series of episodes, which are available now, include discussions concerning:

The best source for business financing
Which loan term is best right now
Why credit unions are better than banks
Cambridge Analytica and Black People
Why tariffs might be a good idea right now

Immigration and Black Employment

In coming weeks, episodes covering a wide range of economic topics will become available.
