In this multimedia-oriented age, the world values multimedia as an essential and indispensable part of human's life. And in recent years, compared to pictures and photos, videos are occupying a higher level in people's mind, and this trending is still increasing. Even in Google SEO ranking research, it is reported that the contents with videos posted would catch more organic traffic than those with only words and simple pictures.

The growing demand towards videos arose a majority of online video websites' awareness to protect the video resources on their sites. Many of them shut down the download function, which made tons of free videos fail to be downloaded for saving. Worse still, KeepVid, a useful YouTube downloader with a rather good reputation also shut down last month. The double blow made lots of video lovers and collectors heartbroken.

But don't worry now, VidPaw is here to take over KeepVid. With the help of VidPaw, people can save more free video resources online. "VidPaw requires no charge because we just want to help more video lovers to get what they need. It is really a pity and even a waste of those free resources leaving online and being forgotten by people." The founder, Wyton Ashley said.
