THE PEOPLE'S VOICE

Ken Saffren specializes in workers' compensation cases along with social security and personal injury litigation. His firm also handles cases involving wrongful death, property damage, product liability, and medical malpractice.

Roughly 65% of initial social security claims are denied. A reconsideration, which is what happened in this client's case, is denied at a much higher rate (85%)."

Marc Weinberg, Partner

Recently, Ken Saffren was able to help a client receive a favorable, six-figure workers' compensation settlement. The client was a long-standing healthcare worker who had sustained a serious injury to her lower back with radicular nerve damage going down both of her legs. Once the case achieved a resolution, Saffren advised the client that she might be a candidate for social security benefits. After consulting with the client's physician, the claimant applied for social security benefits which she initially had been denied.

Unfortunately, social security claims are denied far too often. In fact, according to the Social Security Administration, roughly 65% of initial social security claims are denied. A reconsideration, which is what happened in this client's case, is denied at a much higher rate (85%).

Through a vigorous fight, Saffren went to court and was able to obtain the client social security benefits which she now receives following the substantial resolution of her workers' compensation case.
