Selected Value Chain Analysis done in the full report

Sub-component manufacturers such as accessories manufacturers create their products based on the demand pattern impacted by pull effect from Explosion Proof lighting. Value is added at each step, starting from the sub component manufacturer.

Initially, the product prototype developed by the R&D department (in case of new product) or pre-specified requirements is given to the component manufacturers, who then forwards their requirements to the component/sub component manufacturer. The specification sometimes includes customized products based on the product design specifications and demands the lighting to be manufactured as per the specifications.

At each phase, the device/components/ sub components has to be manufactured as per the industry standards. There are a number of certifying bodies such as ATEX, NEC, IECEx, CEC and so on which specifies the requirements of the hazardous location lighting for each phase of the value chain. At times, these certifications do provide an edge over the competitor's product that guarantees the quality and reliability of the lighting.
