Washington DC - It's not hard to be shocked by the amount of sensitive information that seems to be leaked from the White House on a near-daily basis. Most often this paints Donald Trump, the POTUS, and his programs, policies, and strategies in a poor light. Stepping up to try to help is ISO certification experts G-PMC, led by the deeply experienced professional and patriot Daryl Guberman. Mr. Guberman recently announced the nation's most sought after federally recognized ISO registrar G-PMC submitted an ambitious proposal to ISO certify both the POTUS and the White House in a concentrated effort to prevent the trend of information leaks, which could potentially endanger not just the White House's reputation, but even national security.

“I'm familiar with how Washington insiders work and how lax they can be discussing private over a drink with people who have no business being privy to this knowledge,” commented Mr. Guberman, CEO and founder of the Guberman-PMC, LLC. “Our proposal, if put into place, would have a dramatic effect, we are certain, in keeping White House information much more secure.”

According to Mr. Guberman, he has over 30 years of personal experience, with G-PMC having over seven years of work in providing high-quality ISO certification. It's his powerful belief, that history has shown when organizations of all kinds are held to strong ISO certification standards, they operate more efficiently and securely, and the White House is no exception. G-PMC's proposal was delivered to White House staff roughly a year ago, with information now returning that it is being seriously considered.

G-PMC, an ABAC accredited registrar, is one of the few ISO certification bodies without any ties to organizations, or accrediting groups, linked to foreign nations broadly hostile to American interests. This fact clearly points to G-PMC being a logical first candidate should the White House, wisely choose to act on their reoccurring problems regarding standards and practices.

In addition to his work as the CEO of G-PMC, Daryl Guberman also has very keen political insight, often sharing his political positions online and off and is strongly considering running as a Senatorial Candidate in 2022.
