

2018 Hurricane Season Begins with Increased Demand for Tarps used in Disaster Recovery

Upcoming Storm Season Anticipated to Result in 3 Hurricanes Being Category Strength 3 or Greater

ST. JOSEPH, MICHIGAN, UNITED STATES, May 31, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- With the Atlantic hurricane season officially starting on June 1st, Federal, State and Municipal governmental agencies will be on the front lines of meeting the needs of communities facing between 10 to 16 storms, with up to four storms predicted to be Category 3, 4 or 5 Hurricanes with winds in excess of 110 miles per hour according to The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

In the wake of Puerto Rico's slow recovery from hurricane Maria, Tarps Now® has become a major supplier for providing tarp covers and related materials throughout Puerto Rico and the Caribbean islands, as well as Southeastern and Gulf coastal regions of the United States as governmental agencies, non-profit organizations, businesses and homeowners have begun stockpiling hurricane tarps, roofing tarps, mesh tarps, debris lifting tarps and tarp fabrics that can quickly distributed in the wake of storm damage. Tarps are often used to immediately cover damaged roofing areas, broken windows and doors, which provides immediate relief to residents. Tarps are also used for water capture purposes, sun screen and shade, debris lifting and several other uses after a storm that are both low cost and easy to implement.

Tarps Now® meets the need for protective coverings around homes and other outdoor structures, the company also encourages the use of protective mesh tarp coverings that come in a wide range of different screen factors, weights, fabric grades and colors that are engineered specific that offer varying levels of both UV protection and wind resistance, depending on the selected material and design.
