

Long Island Media Inc Announces Revamp of LongIsland.com Health Section

New section will bring together critical information, medical professionals and public with LongIsland.com serving as conduit.

COMMACK, NEW YORK, UNITED STATES, June 11, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Earlier this month, Long Island Media Inc., the company behind LongIsland.com, released a statement from CEO John Colascione that includes information regarding a sharp change in editorial content to its flagship digital brand, LongIsland.com

In the statement, released on its website, Colascione goes into great detail on why the geo-portal locally known as the Island's Most Popular Website, will increase its coverage and include local healthcare related information provided by the Island's medical community.

“LongIsland.com has long been a great provider of information, and community-related news, however, there is a lack of high-quality information when it comes to the specific issue of healthcare-related solutions. For instance, we want to increase the type of content which is available on LongIsland.com as it relates to biological threats, in particular, especially those which life-altering diseases and preventive solutions are now readily available,” he said. “The strategic plan is to provide a much greater emphasis on critical healthcare related issues for local residents, including a source of qualified research and patient experiences that the public can use to potentially solve general wellness issues as well as crises when confronted with health-related road-blocks in life.”
