Have You Witnessed a Co-Worker Being Sexually Harassed?

New York City, NY: The EEOC (Equal Employment Opportunity Commission) reported that of the 30% of new claims they received, women accounted for 74% of the victims of sexual harassment within the workplace.

...the conditions must also directly impact the victim's ability to do their job.”

Taryn Abrahams

In this critical new episode of Beyond My Crisis with Ron & Vivian their guest, Taryn Abrahams, a sexual harassment corporate trainer, specializing in bystander intervention training, has come to reveal the social impact of the #MeToo movement and ramifications to the corporate working environment. Ms. Abrahams is passionately bringing awareness and cost savings to corporate workplaces through the understanding that bystander intervention is the missing link. She describes how to bring positive change and reduce legal risk by empowering victims and onlookers to speak responsibly instead of ignoring unprofessional behavior. If observers remain silent it fosters an environment where the aggressor may escalate and propagate inappropriate behavior; and while the victim, living in fear, may have lower productivity and morale and ultimately, companies and families endure greater risk. While sexual harassment is not always obvious, “it must be both severe and pervasive” as noted by Ms. Abrahams, when asked to define key components of sexual harassment and continues to say, “...the conditions must also directly impact the victim's ability to do their job.” A clear sign that someone is a victim of workplace sexual harassment is that they no longer feel safe in their work environment and may result in an increase of sick days, due to emotional stress or fear of a physical interaction with their aggressor.
