

Respected immigration attorney Magdalena Cuprys starts legal blog and commentary on immigration matters

Magdalena Cuprys of Cuprys and Associates/Serving Immigrants law firm announced her new legal blog which will focus primarily on visa and immigration matters.

MIAMI, FLORIDA, UNITED STATES, July 8, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- "With all the recent news and misinformation regarding immigration, I felt that I could help explain the truths behind the real issues at hand," said Magdalena Cuprys. "Here at Cuprys and Associates we have over a decade of experience working on immigration issues not only for individuals but for corporations as well," Magdalena added. This experience can help people understand how visa and immigration matters are changing.

One of the important aspect generally not reported in the media is how immigration laws and regulations are applied. Only practitioners like Magdalena Cuprys have insight into these matters. For example, recently the immigration service USCIS seems to have begun to scrutinize in particular L-1B "specialized knowledge" petitions (these are visas for specialized employees who are transferred from abroad to the United States). Because it is difficult to prove exactly what "specialized knowledge" such an employee has in a written application, some attorneys are now using Expert Opinions as proof that the beneficiary in fact has such knowledge. As another example, some practitioners have seen identical "Requests for Evidence" from USCIS about personal income when a U.S. citizen marries a foreign citizen, even when the proof of income that was initially submitted is clearly sufficient.
