MALIBU, CALIFORNIA, US, September 4, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- It is widely known that adults with limited English abilities in America generally suffer from greater unemployment and lower wages. With 32 out of 50 U.S. States having declared American English as the Official Language, the ability to speak English correctly is vital to success as an American or an immigrant to the United States.

If a person wants to become a U.S. Citizen, they will have to take a Naturalization Test. This includes a Speaking Test, whereby the applicant's ability to speak English will be determined by a USCIS Officer during the eligibility interview. The applicant must also pass a Reading Test, where they must correctly read aloud one of three sentences, to demonstrate an ability to read in English. Furthermore, a Writing Test must be passed in which the Naturalization Applicant must correctly write out one of three sentences, in order to demonstrate an ability to write in English.
