Europe to dominate the Prebiotic Ingredients Market

Europe will dominate the Prebiotic Ingredients Market. It will reach $2,934.34 million by 2023 at a CAGR of 9.8%. The increasing demand for prebiotics in Europe is due to the rising concerns for gut health, growing demand for dairy products, and others. Continuous innovative product launches in all application segments will enhance the growth of Prebiotic Ingredients Market in Europe. Prebiotic products are used in the daily foods, since they provide more fibre content, improve the texture, and have high functionality. The functional and food beverage segment will have the highest share in the European market.

Selected Analysis done in the full Report:

The functional food and beverage segment dominates the Prebiotic Ingredients Market. In 2017, this segment had a share of $ 2,643 million. It is expected to reach $ 4,906.64 million by 2023 at a CAGR of 9.9%. Growing inclination towards prebiotics over antibiotics will certainly boost this segment. High suitability of the ingredients for fortification is also another plus point for the segment which will propel the Prebiotic Ingredients Market. The Dietary supplements segment is the second largest segment due to increasing product launches in the digestive health supplements market.
