Much of the research in nanotherapy has been largely directed towards cancer therapy. One of the biggest issues with conventional methods is that as the drug product is distributed throughout the body, both healthy and unhealthy (cancerous cells) are affected, which in turn affects the effectiveness of cancer treatment. It is for this very reason that most cancer patients tend to be hesitant when it comes to chemotherapy. However, nanotherapy, which is also referred to as targeted therapy, offers to deliver the molecules to the affected cells in order to help treat the disease without causing other negative effects to the healthy cells.

In 2017, the global Nano Therapy market size was xx million US$ and it is expected to reach xx million US$ by the end of 2025, with a CAGR of xx% during 2018-2025.
