

VREF & air.one join forces to bring Aircraft Value Reports to the consumer in a first for the aviation market

VREF launches first Reports for the air.one marketplace. The report provides value, title search, damage history, allowing buyers/sellers to shop confidence.

CHICAGO, IL, USA, September 6, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- In a first for the general aviation market, thanks to the innovative teams at VREF and air.one, aircraft buyers, sellers, brokers along with anyone from the general public will be able to purchase, direct from the point of sale, a comprehensive evaluation report based on the listed aircraft's actual component status and installed equipment list. The report contains crucial information for a potential buyer or seller including ownership history, incident and damage history, market trends, and model specific historical value data. The VREF Verified Report is returned to the air.one user "Stamped" and verified the same business day.

VREF continues to drive transparency in the market by bringing true aircraft value direct to the consumer for the first time via its VREF Verified Reports”

Air.one has adopted a data driven approach to the aircraft marketplace, enabling VREF to quickly and accurately determine their opinion of value. This same approach also results in powerful search and compare functions that enable buyers and sellers to more effectively assess the available aircraft in the market.

“We are thrilled to be working with Jason Zilberbrand and Ken Dufour at VREF, we share the same vision for a more efficient aircraft market, developing technology and data solutions to empower aircraft buyers and sellers to make informed decisions.” said air.one founder Andrew Leece. “The ability to purchase a specific aircraft valuation at the point of sale is a first in the aircraft market and we look forward to developing more initiatives for our customers with great partners like VREF.”

“Collaborating with air.one made total sense as VREF is getting closer to the release of its all new application. The beautiful layout, fresh design and alignment of corporate values of air.one will create a consumer experience that has never been offered before,” said VREF President Jason Zilberbrand.
