Rising incidence and prevalence of life style oriented diseases are driving the growth of bioabsorbable stent market”
OMR Analyst

“A slow adoption rate has been witnessed in the market for bioabsorbable stent due to the high risk of complications associated with its implantation. There was an increasing shift towards the bioabsorbable stent from the conventional metallic drug-eluting stents (DES). However, recent data from the clinical trial has changed the perception. As a result of which, the players in the market are about to end the sell of bioabsorbable stent. For instance: the clinical trial of the ABSORB stent by Abbott showed poor outcomes with no long-term benefits. In addition, the clinical trial showed a significant increase in the target lesion failure. As a result of which, Abbott has decided to pull of the sales of its bioabsorbable stent as of September 2017. In addition, another major player Boston Scientific has halted its investment for this technology. The end of the sale of bioabsorbable stents by such market players may result into the end of the market in the coming years.”

The market on the basis of geography is divided among four major regions which includes North America, APAC, Europe, and Rest of the world. North America has been dominating the bioabsorbable stent market due to highest healthcare spending, sophisticated healthcare system, and large pool of target population. The rise in the number of cardiovascular patient and increasing medical tourism in the APAC region, economic developments and government reforms, especially in countries such as China and India, are supporting market growth in this region.
