The internet security market is expected to grow at a CAGR of 12% during the forecast period i.e. 2018 to 2023

North America is holding the maximum share of IT security market due to advanced technologies and early adoption of IT security.

HYDERABAD, TELANGANA, INDIA, September 14, 2018 /EINPresswire.com/ -- IT security solutions are used to secure network infrastructure as well as the other devices connected through it. The demand for security solutions is rapidly increasing on the arrival of IOT trends that connects large number of devices and applications via internet and other connected devices that are capable to Advanced Persistent Threats (APTs). Further, the protection of these devices and applications are becoming the prime objective of organizations.

IT security is facing many challenges from hackers and cyber criminals. Nothing is worse than spread of virus that sneek into customer and business information that can only be removed when the cybercriminal's blatant demand is met. Some of the attacks that shook the cyber world are Ransomware, wannacry, fraudulent banking transactions and so on. But now this attacks are fading with time, many enterprises are now securing their systems by implementing IT security solutions so as to prevent cyber-attacks from happening further. Adoption of blockchain enables companies to manage data and to decentralize access control.

Unified threat management, Firewall, Antivirus and Antimalware, Intrusion detection system, Risk and compliance management, Web filtering and so on are some of the security measures the companies are relying on. Unified threat management is a type of network hardware appliance or cloud service that shields the business from security threats. An intrusion detection system monitors traffic for dubious activities and issue alerts when such activity is detected, some intrusion detection systems have capability of taking actions when unusual traffic is detected. Due to its various applications in industries, internet security market growth is getting increased.
